UNITED NATIONS DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE FRAMEWORK

South Africa

2007 – 2010

The Resident Co-ordinator of the UN System in South Africa and the Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs signing the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) for South Africa 2007 – 2010 on UN Day 26 October 2006.

The 2007 – 2010 United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) for South Africa is the outcome of close consultations and a dynamic partnership between the Government of South Africa and the United Nations and reflects the response of the United Nations Country Team in South Africa to critical national development priorities. As such, the UNDAF bears testimony to the commitment by Government and the United Nations Country Team to the partnership to achieve collective goals and promote development.

By following a widely inclusive process, Government led the development of a new Common Country Assessment (CCA) and the 2007 – 2010 UNDAF. In this regard, Government wrote the new CCA on which the 2007 – 2010 UNDAF is based.

The United Nations Country Team in South Africa is deeply appreciative of its collaboration with the Government of South Africa, which facilitated the co-operative development of the 2007 – 2010 UNDAF. The 2007 – 2010 UNDAF is based on a common understanding of the strengths of the United Nations system and how the United Nations could be best placed to add value to Government's own Programme of Action in the pursuit of its objectives and priorities. In keeping with the principles of the Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness, the 2007 – 2010 UNDAF is fully aligned with national development priorities and framed within the context of the Government's system of co-operative governance. As such, it is hoped that the 2007 – 2010 UNDAF will assist Government in achieving its main objective of improving the quality of life of all South Africans.

The signing of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) for South Africa for 2007 – 2010 is an important milestone in the UN System's strategic commitment to support the goals of Vision 2014 in South Africa.

Sincere thanks and appreciation go to the many officials in Government and the many representatives of the United Nations Funds Programmes and Agencies represented in South Africa for their tireless efforts and useful contributions in the various working groups that collaborated to produce this 2007 – 2010 UNDAF.

A Hymn to the UN

Music: Pablo Casals

Words: WH Auden

Eagerly, musician.
Sweep your string,
So we may sing.
Elated, optative,
Our several voices
Interblending,
Playfully contending,
Not interfering
But co-inhering,
For all within
The cincture of the sound
Is holy ground
Where all are brothers,
None faceless Others,
Let mortals beware
Of words, for
With words we lie,
Can say peace
When we mean war,
Foul thought speak-fair
And promise falsely,
But song is true:
Let music for peace
Be the paradigm,
For peace means to change
At the right time,
as the World-Clock
Goes Tick-and Tock.

So may the story
Of our human city
Presently move
Like music, when Begotten notes
New notes beget
Making the flowing
Of time a growing
Till what it could be,

At last it is,
Where even sadness
Is a form of gladness,
Where fate is freedom,
Grace and Surprise.

MILLENNIUM Development Goals (MDGs)

The Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) were derived from the United Nations Millennium Declaration and adopted by heads of state and leaders of 189 nations at the UN Millennium Summit held in New York in 2000. The Millennium Summit was a culmination of a series of major global development summits held during the 1990s that reflected growing international concern over the slow pace of development and the intractable nature of poverty, hunger and environmental degradation. World leaders from developed and developing countries alike committed themselves, at the highest political level, to a set of eight measurable, time-bound targets that, when achieved, will end extreme poverty and hunger worldwide by 2015.

The Millennium Declaration highlighted the special needs of Africa and the MDGs form the blueprint for all efforts to meet the needs of the continent's poorest and most marginalised people. South Africa is a signatory to the Millennium Declaration and has adopted the MDGs, and has ensured that they are integrated into the country's key development priorities and foregrounded in Vision 2014. As the custodians of the MDGs, the United Nations is fully committed to supporting countries in their quest to achieve these goals, thereby ensuring a better quality of life for their peoples. As reflected in its first MDG Report 2005 South Africa appears well on track to meet its MDG commitments. The United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) is designed to facilitate South Africa's efforts in meeting its MDG targets.

1. Eradicate extreme poverty and hunger

2. Achieve universal primary education

3. Promote gender equality and empower women

4. Reduce child mortality

5. Improve maternal health

6. Combat HIV/AIDS, malaria and other diseases

7. Ensure environmental sustainability

8. Develop a global partnership for development

1. EXECUTIVE

Summary

An intensive six-month consultative exercise in 2005 culminated in a CCA Symposium, out of which came the Government-prepared Country Analysis. This document formed the basis for further engagement that produced the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) for South Africa 2007 – 2010. The UNDAF has emerged from a nationally owned dialogue and represents the UN's response to critical national development priorities centred on Vision 2014, a framework that guides the South African outlook and interventions directed at addressing key developmental challenges into the second decade of democracy, and framed within the context of the MDGs.

The UNDAF is unique in that it is fully aligned with national development priorities and framed within the context of the Government's system of co-operative governance. The UN's five priority areas are based on the broad national development goals set out in each of the five cluster groups and the national and programme outcomes are derived from the National Programme of Action. Together, these five priority areas and 24 programme outcomes outline what the UN System in South Africa commits to implement over the next four years. Through the UNDAF, the UN System in South Africa is presenting areas of proposed development intervention. The actual execution of such activities will, however, be dependent upon funds being mobilised, which for the Specialised Agencies cannot be known with certainty at the time of signature.

Millennium Development Goal 1

ERADICATE extreme poverty and hunger

Extreme poverty remains a daily reality for more than 1 billion people who subsist on less than $1 a day.

The UN will support South Africa in the following priority areas:	The UN's work will be aimed at supporting Government and other development partners to achieve the following outcomes for South Africa:
Democracy, good governance and administration are strengthened	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Improved capacity of provincial and local government to deliver effective basic social services</li> <li>2. Improved processes related to the macro-organisation of the state</li> <li>3. Strengthened participatory governance processes</li> </ol>

2. INTRODUCTION

South Africa is a powerful emerging democracy that has striven during its first decade of democracy to overcome the legacies of poverty, inequity and bad governance that were left after the demise of the apartheid state, based on the principles set out in the Constitution of South Africa<sup>1</sup>. South Africa has moved confidently into its second decade of democracy, building on the progress it has already made in establishing a democratic polity on the foundations of an array of progressive legislation, policy frameworks and implementation strategies. South Africa is a middle-income country, a regional powerhouse and an important player on the global stage. In this regard, South Africa served as Chair of the Non-Aligned Movement (NAM) from 1998 to 2003. South Africa was a co-founder of the India, Brazil South Africa Dialogue Forum (IBSA), which works actively to strengthen South-South Co-operation in international fora. South Africa also championed the establishment of the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD), which promotes the strengthening of partnerships amongst African countries themselves and with the African continent as a whole. South Africa was elected to chair the Group of 77 in New York during 2006 and in January 2007 took up its seat as one of the non-permanent members of the Security Council. Through prudent management of the economy, South Africa's resource envelope has expanded considerably – thereby lessening the need for external loans that are almost always accompanied by externally imposed aid modalities such as PRSPs and World Bank loans.

ACHIEVE universal primary education

Education gives people choices regarding the kind of lives they wish to lead.

South Africa has been playing an important role in taking forward the new global development agenda. It has made important contributions to the UN Reform process and is playing an active role in the OECD/DAC's Joint Venture on Monitoring the Paris Declaration on aid effectiveness. South Africa is fully aware of the issues related to aid effectiveness that are currently being debated, and in its interactions with its development partners has been consistent in stressing the importance of national ownership of the development process. This insistence is based on the expectation that development partners will take seriously their Paris Declaration commitments, and will ensure that their country programming is fully harmonised and aligned with South Africa's development agenda.

On the basis of this understanding, the UN in South Africa has sought to engage with the Government of South Africa within the context of national ownership and mutual accountability principles. This was both a necessary and welcome shift in emphasis on the part of the UN, which had previously had a relatively marginal development partnership with the Government of South Africa. In November 2004, an inter-agency CCA/UNDAF Task Force was established to co-ordinate the CCA/UNDAF process under the direction of the Resident Co-ordinator and the UN Country Team. In May 2005 the UN Country Team held a meeting with the Government of South Africa at the Presidency. This meeting was marked by a frank, constructive and forward-looking exchange of views that served to assist both parties in moving towards a common understanding. It was also agreed at this meeting that the Africa Institute of South Africa (AISA) would facilitate UN/Government interactions towards the development of a Common Country Assessment<sup>2</sup>. Building on this revitalised relationship, UN agencies moved ahead with a series of intensive training activities to ensure that staff was fully briefed on the new UN development agenda.

Under the auspices of AISA, and in frequent consultation with the Department of Foreign Affairs, the point of entry for the UN system to Government, a series of 14 research papers were commissioned to form the basis of a national dialogue on South Africa's key development challenges. These papers were written by leading academics, and while analytical in nature, they were also proactive in mapping out possible solutions. The two-day CCA Symposium held in October 2005 brought Government, the UN and other stakeholders together for a dialogue around the content of the CCA papers and a discussion of strategic directions for UN development assistance. At the CCA Symposium it was agreed that the Government, under the direction of the Department of Foreign Affairs, would in the spirit of national ownership write the Common Country Assessment. The Department of Foreign Affairs chaired an expanded UN Working Group, which was convened for the purpose of allowing various Government Departments to participate in the process of developing the new CCA. In February 2006 the Department of Foreign Affairs presented their Country Analysis to the UN, as signed off by the Directors-General of the Government Departments that make up the International Relations, Peace and Security Cluster. Emerging from discussions during the UNCT Annual Retreat and Strategic Planning Retreat with Government, the UN prepared a detailed results-based response to the Government's Country Analysis<sup>3</sup>. As a follow-up to these strategic meetings, the UN also established five inter-agency Cluster Working Groups to develop and refine the UNDAF cluster matrices and streamline agency outputs. This document was submitted to the Department of Foreign Affairs for further consideration, and a follow-up validation meeting between the UNCT and a number of Government Departments was held on 30 March 2006.

<sup>2</sup> The Africa Institute of South Africa was established in 1960 as an independent, non-profit research organisation. Their focus is primarily on political, socio-economic, international and development issues in contemporary Africa.

<sup>3</sup> These two strategic meetings were held in the week of 27 February – 03 March 2006.

3. SUMMARY OF THE Common Country Analysis

The CCA provides comprehensive information on the situation in South Africa, the needs that should be addressed and Government priorities in this regard. The intention here is not to summarise all aspects of the CCA, but rather to highlight certain parts thereof that are relevant to the integration of United Nations support to the priorities of the South African Government.

South Africa is a country of contradictions, a country of stark contrasts, between First World technological advancement and high living standards on the one hand, and large areas of extreme poverty and deprivation on the other. Following the historic transition to democracy in 1994, the new democratic Government has established a vibrant democracy, with a model Constitution, backed by a strong human rights-centred judicial and legal system. The efforts of the new Government to provide basic services to the whole population and bring about a more equitable dispensation of the national wealth have borne significant changes, but much still remains to be done.

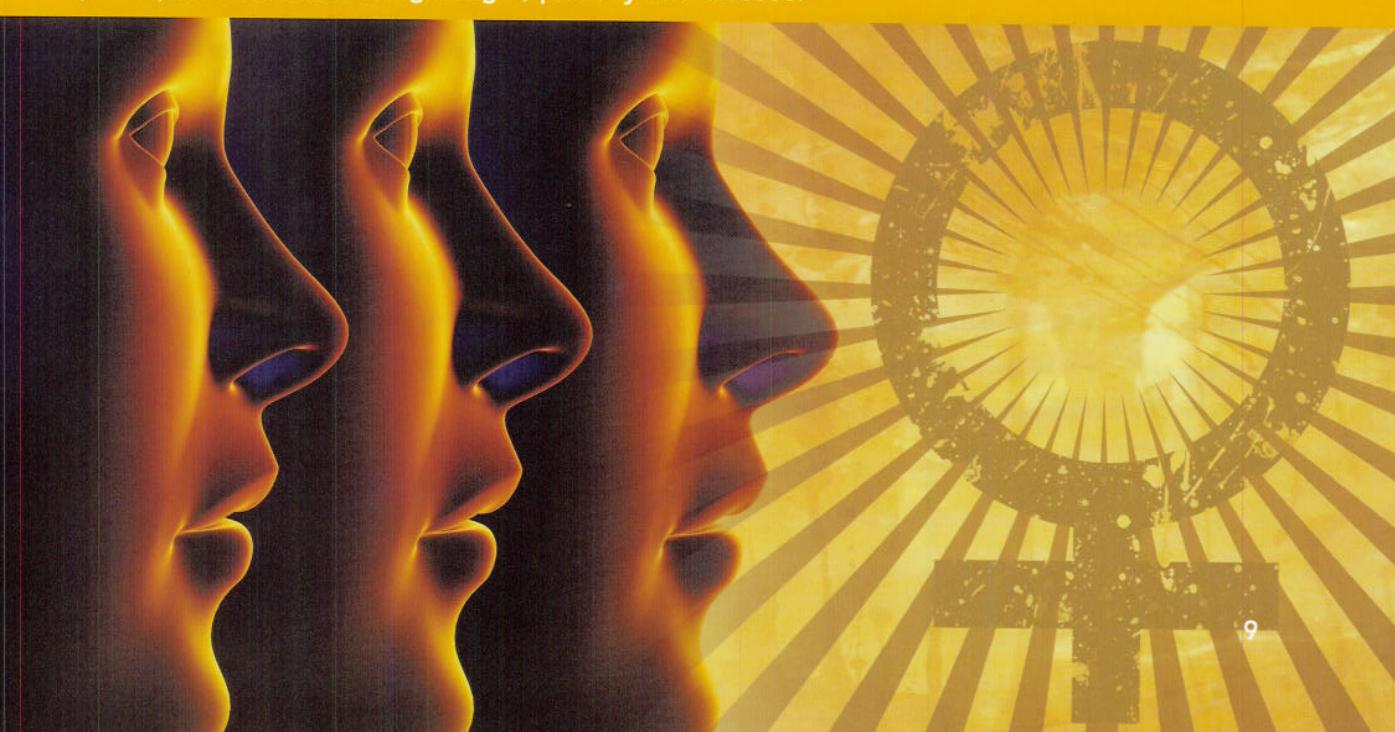

Since 1994, the South African Government has been engaged in a vigorous process of transformation that has included the transformation of the state machinery and changes to almost all policies. The core objective of Government, as set out in the mid-term review of 2004, is to halve poverty and unemployment by 2014, the second decade of South Africa's democracy. To do so, South Africa would need to ensure that the environment and opportunities for more labour-absorbing economic activities is considerably improved. More broadly, it is necessary to ensure that the fruits of growth are shared in such a way that poverty comes as close as possible to being eliminated, and that the severe inequalities that still plague the country are considerably reduced.

Millennium Development Goal 3

PROMOTE gender equality and empower women

Gender equality is a human right.

It is a prerequisite to overcoming hunger, poverty and disease.

Government's vision of South Africa's development path is a vigorous and inclusive economy where goods and services are diverse, more value is added to goods and services produced, the costs of production and distribution are reduced, labour is readily absorbed into sustainable employment, and new businesses are encouraged to proliferate and expand. In July 2005, President Mbeki placed Deputy President Mlambo-Ngcuka in charge of the Accelerated and Shared Growth Initiative for South Africa (ASGI-SA), which aims to catapult the South African economy to 6% GDP sustainable growth through such measures as job creation, infrastructure development, youth and skills development. The expectation is that this initiative will build a conducive business environment and guarantee returns on investments as well as provide the requisite levels and rates of skills development to satisfy the demands of the labour market.

ASGI-SA will see the implementation of better-focused policies and Government programmes, improved public administration and well-targeted regulation, as well as stronger partnerships between Government, business and civil society. Government's seriousness in bringing about social transformation is clearly evident in its multi-faceted approach to poverty eradication. Expenditure for social services and improved economic performance has given South Africa further possibilities to significantly improve the material and social conditions of its people.

South Africa has followed a coherent and structured approach to tackling poverty by integrating it into sectoral policies, strategies and budgetary allocations. Government has also issued a 10-year Programme of Action (POA) for Sustainable Growth and Development. The key challenges and vision for 2014, the second decade of a democratic South Africa, envisage the entrenchment of democracy, the creation of a truly non-racial and non-sexist society, eradicating poverty, instilling safety and security, establishing an efficient and effective functioning democratic state and contributing to the African Renaissance. Converting this vision into action remains a challenge that requires concerted efforts at all levels of Government.

Along with the broad-based black economic empowerment strategy, the Government is focusing on a comprehensive package of interventions to unlock the potential of South Africa's Second Economy. The targeted interventions in respect of the Second Economy focus on the following priority areas: building a well-educated nation that is also healthy; acceleration of access to productive assets; reduction of inequality; increasing income of the poor and the marginalised; and meeting basic needs.

The implementation of the Black Economic Empowerment (BEE) Charter is considered as an instrument to address the economic divide (inequity and inequality) and for broadening economic participation. It is equally an endeavour to bring the Second Economy (the widely dispersed informal Small, Medium and Micro Enterprises) into the mainstream formal sector of the economy. The challenge lies in integrating the First and the Second Economies for mutual benefit. This will include, among other key issues, bringing emerging farmers into the mainstream structure of agricultural production.

The Government has put in place overarching policies and strategies focusing on outcomes-based, multi-faceted poverty alleviation strategies. High and rising unemployment and the persistence of the HIV/AIDS pandemic are critical challenges facing the South African Government. Unemployment is being tackled through encouraging growth in the First Economy and by supporting and strengthening the Second Economy, which in effect would enable the informal sector to graduate to the mainstream economy of South Africa. Skills improvement and private sector development, along with labour-intensive public works programmes, are measures intended to address the unemployment challenges.

The education and skills development sector has moved from stabilising the education and training system towards improving access, quality and equity. The critical challenges of the sector include, among others, development and implementation of Adult Education and Training (ABET), early childhood development (ECD) and "outcome-based" Further Education and Training (FET). A key focus will be improving the outcome of education in the early years of education and infusing general literacy, including reading, writing and basic numeracy. Science, maths and technology will be advanced, but remain a challenge on all the levels of education, starting from the foundation level. The other challenge in education and training will be in advancing outcome-based education in FET in order to ensure that skills supply responds to demand in the labour market. The National Skills Development Strategy (2005 – 2014) will play a key role in realising Government's goal of halving unemployment by 2014. Combating HIV/AIDS remains a priority of Government.

South Africa places a high importance on people's abilities and opportunities to enjoy long and healthy lives. To this end, improving access to health facilities is both critical and challenging. Access to the primary healthcare system has to be expanded. These include access to services for maternal and child health, infectious diseases (HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis and other communicable diseases) in order to reduce mortality and morbidity. The revitalisation of run-down hospitals will continue.

South Africa places great emphasis and focus on Africa and its development. In this regard, substantial effort is put into consolidation of the African agenda by strengthening the African Union and its structures as well as those of the Southern African Development Community (SADC), promoting NEPAD and addressing peace, security, stability and post-conflict reconstruction on the continent. South-South co-operation is also a key priority of South Africa's foreign policy, with particular emphasis placed on its relationships with groupings such as the G77, the NAM, the Asia Africa

Sub-Regional Organisations Conference and IBSA. South Africa also plays a significant role within the United Nations as it places a high premium on multilateralism and strives to improve global governance in the spheres of politics and security, as well as social and economic governance. Numerous multilateral and bilateral agreements have either been concluded or are currently being negotiated, both within the UN system and the WTO as well as with other partners, including countries of the South, such as India, Brazil and China, as well as the EU and USA. In this way, South Africa is broadening and deepening its ties with all members of the community of nations.

South Africa has largely succeeded in maintaining macro-economic stability and has moved towards a more growth-oriented fiscal stance. Within this framework, policy is being directed towards strengthening micro-economic reform initiatives, thereby creating an enabling environment for economic growth and employment. These initiatives have to be complemented by reforms in the regulatory frameworks, tax revisions, the restructuring of state assets, maintenance of inflation targets and in other critical macro-economic areas.

In the area of science and technology, the following mid-term challenges have been identified:

- To develop and maintain a highly competent and representative cohort of scientists in South Africa.
- Strong innovation chains are needed in biotechnology, nanotechnology, the hydrogen economy, space science, information technology and manufacturing.
- The development of technologies to address poverty and the poor quality of life.
- The improvement of a healthy and diverse flow of young people seeking and finding careers in science and engineering.

Ensuring access to land and security of tenure is a major challenge. Speeding up the processing of rural claims will have a major impact on the land restitution programme. It is foreseen that the disposal of state land will give an impulse to local economic activities. Land tenure reform remains an essential ingredient of rural development. Ensuring that beneficiaries of land restitution and redistribution are enabled to use the land in a productive manner is key to building sustainability into the process of redistribution of assets to previously disadvantaged communities.

Empowering local Governments is an important dimension to deepening and broadening democracy. It has been recognised that during the initial start-up period of the transfer of responsibilities, local Governments could be overwhelmed by the tasks to be accomplished, possibly resulting in slow delivery of services, unless these are accompanied by adequate capacity-building initiatives. A major and urgent priority for Government at all levels is to improve the delivery of basic services.

Statistics released by the Government in 2004/5 indicate that there has been a general decline in crime rates, although these rates are still relatively high. The level of crime and violence could, among others, have adverse effects on domestic economic viability and a negative impact on foreign direct investment.

Reinforcing crime prevention activities is a huge challenge that requires major investment in human resources and infrastructure. This should be coupled with capacity-building and strong co-operative partnership with communities. Upgrading of information technology and infrastructure is a significant challenge. A critical element in this regard is the upgrading of the computer networks of the law enforcement agencies, which is a key factor in addressing case-flow management. More work undoubtedly needs to be done in the fight against serious and violent crimes, organised crime and crimes against women and children. Various challenges still remain for the law enforcement authorities in efforts to ensure regional development and security, in terms of direct interventions, mediation and institution-building.

In the broader context of a rapidly globalising world, South Africa continues to face serious challenges both in terms of its domestic socio-economic development and the legacy of apartheid, and in terms of Africa's position in the world. In this latter area, South Africa continues to fight for greater international attention to Africa's needs, especially the need to roll back poverty and under-development and bring peace and prosperity to the continent. In line with the prescripts of its new Constitution, policies and programmes and in the process of transforming a deeply divided society, South Africa is creating a socio-economic and political environment that is conducive to addressing poverty, inequality and restoring the dignity of all its citizens.

4. INTEGRATING UN SUPPORT TO South African Government Priorities

Following the review of the degree to which the democratic dispensation has redirected the purpose and content of Government policy in the first decade of democracy, the Towards 10-Year Review documents evaluate progress made while acknowledging the challenges that still need to be addressed. Moving forward into the second decade of democracy, Vision 2014 captures these challenges and makes them the focus of Government's efforts. The UN intends to support the Government in its effort to achieve its broad development goals that are based on the "five big ideas" which lay the foundation for Vision 2014. Vision 2014 articulates an all-encompassing framework that guides the South African outlook and state and societal interventions directed at addressing key developmental challenges into the second decade of democracy.

The United Nations system and its country programmes, in formulating future collaboration, have taken into cognisance the detailed development trajectory of South Africa, which takes into account broad social and economic transformation outcomes, as detailed in the Reconstruction and Development Programme (RDP).

The pillars of this trajectory focus on:

- Meeting basic needs • Building the economy • Democratising the state and society
- Developing human resources, and • Nation-building

Millennium Development Goal 4

REDUCE child mortality

Every year, almost 11 million children die.

The United Nations system recognises the challenges and progress made in the first decade of freedom and notes that South Africa will celebrate its second decade of freedom and democracy in 2014. In order to support the South African Government to make continued and accelerated progress towards a higher sustained growth and development path, the United Nations system will reinforce programmes and interventions as directed by the RDP principles and major public sector investments directed at the consolidation of democracy, human development and economic growth.

Vision 2014 promotes a better life for all through targets and objectives, which seek to ensure that:

- Poverty is halved by 2014, through (amongst others) economic development, comprehensive social security, land reform and improved household and community assets;
- Unemployment is halved by 2014, through employment creation, skills development, assistance to small businesses, opportunities for self-employment and sustainable community livelihoods;
- Skills required by the economy are provided, by building capacity and providing resources across society to encourage self-employment with an education system that is geared towards productive work, good citizenship and a caring society;
- Society is integrated by ensuring that all South Africans, especially the poor and those at risk – children, youth, women, the aged, and people with disabilities – are fully able to exercise their Constitutional rights and enjoy the full dignity of freedom;
- Government is compassionate by ensuring that services and public service representatives are accessible whilst citizens are awarded avenues to know their rights and should be enabled to insist on fair treatment and efficient services;
- Tuberculosis, diabetes, malnutrition and maternal death cases are greatly reduced and the tide is turned against HIV/AIDS, as well as working with the rest of Southern Africa to strive to eliminate malaria, and improve services to achieve a better national health profile and reduce preventable causes of death, including violent crime and road accidents;

- Serious and priority crimes are significantly reduced in number, as well as cases awaiting trial, with a society that actively challenges crime and corruption, and with programmes that also address the social roots of criminality; and
- South Africa is strategically positioned as an effective force in global relations, with vibrant and balanced trade and other relations with countries of the South and the North, and in an Africa that is growing, prospering and benefiting all Africans, especially the poor.

In an attempt to assist in the reaching of these targets and objectives, and in response to the CCA, the UN system has incorporated the "five big ideas" as outlined by Government in Vision 2014, with a view to achieving these fundamental objectives. Taking into account the experience of a decade of reconstruction and development, the social trends and the global context, a people-centred and transformation-driven partnership has been agreed, which requires the following "five big ideas":

1. Mobilising partners behind an all-encompassing framework and vision defining a shared approach and destiny as a basis for social partnerships with all sectors of society;
2. Improving the performance of the state, by continuing to improve policy co-ordination, whilst improving the capacity of the state to implement its transformative policies and paying attention to all spheres of Government to manage the implementation of these policies;
3. Addressing consequences of the social transition, as reflected in migration and demography, the

- structure of the economy and the character of the labour force;
4. Improving the regional environment and implementing NEPAD, so as to ensure regional peace, stability, prosperity and sustainable development; and
  5. Enhancing sustainable livelihoods as a means to eradicate poverty, achieving human development, ensuring ecological integrity and matching development interventions to current and future resources.
- These ideas facilitate continued progress towards the abovementioned fundamental objectives of Government. Major interventions for the achievement thereof will require co-ordinated input from all sectors of the South African society and must integrate economic and social outcomes so as to ensure that economic growth benefits everyone.
- The UNDAF will incorporate eight critical cross-cutting issues that will be mainstreamed across the outcomes and outputs under each of the cluster priorities:
1. Gender and Vulnerable Groups: The particular needs of women, children, previously disadvantaged individuals, refugees, the disabled, and other vulnerable people must be given special consideration in the UNDAF. Addressing the needs of these groups helps South Africa to transform its society into a non-racist, non-sexist, non-exclusionary democracy;
  2. Human Rights: The UN and Government have utilised the concepts of a human rights-based approach to programming. For example, data are disaggregated by sex or age, community participation is encouraged, and the principles of Batho Pele embraced;
  3. Environmental Issues: South Africa's natural resources provide an excellent foundation from which to expand the economy so that jobs and wealth benefit the poor, but this should be undertaken in a manner that ensures sustainable development for future generations;
  4. HIV/AIDS: The pandemic of HIV/AIDS has had a major impact on South Africa. The Country Analysis mentions the "persistence of the HIV/AIDS pandemic [as one of] the current main challenges facing the South African Government". HIV/AIDS should be considered in the context of other communicable diseases and threats to public health. Addressing these problems should include dealing with key socio-economic determinants thereof, giving special consideration to gender and vulnerable groups;
  5. Capacity-Building: The Government and UN have recognised the importance of improving the capacity of provincial and local Government at key technical levels, especially where it impinges on service delivery and financial management. This includes building the capacity of both human resources and institutions;
  6. Research and Development: South Africa boasts some of the world's renowned research institutions in the fields of medicine, technology and social sciences. Research and development in South Africa are guided by the National Research and Development Strategy of 2002, which focuses on science, engineering, technology and innovation. The need for enhanced capacity-building efforts has been highlighted by the introduction of the Joint Initiative for Priority Skills Acquisition of South Africa (JIPSA). Science, engineering and technology should form a key component of efforts to transform the second economy;
  7. Monitoring and Evaluation: Government has recognised the need to build the necessary institutions and systems to enable its executive structures to collect, process and analyse information relating to the evolution of South African society, as well as the impact of national and international policies and developments on the society. Accordingly, efforts are underway to strengthen the monitoring and evaluation function across Government, starting with the establishment of a Government-wide Monitoring and Evaluation Framework in the Presidency.

Information reported on will be disaggregated at several levels so as to ensure impact on such issues and groups as gender; youth; provincial, national and local Government; income; age; etc;

8. Monitoring and Evaluation of each UN

intervention: The UN and Government must build into each UN intervention a mechanism to monitor the achievement of both activities and impact.

An Annual Review will be conducted at which each cluster theme group will present the progress of its work. The UN and Government will also utilise these Annual Reviews to determine whether any major changes to the priorities or direction of the UNDAF should be enacted.

5. CO-OPERATIVE GOVERNANCE AND Key National Development Priorities

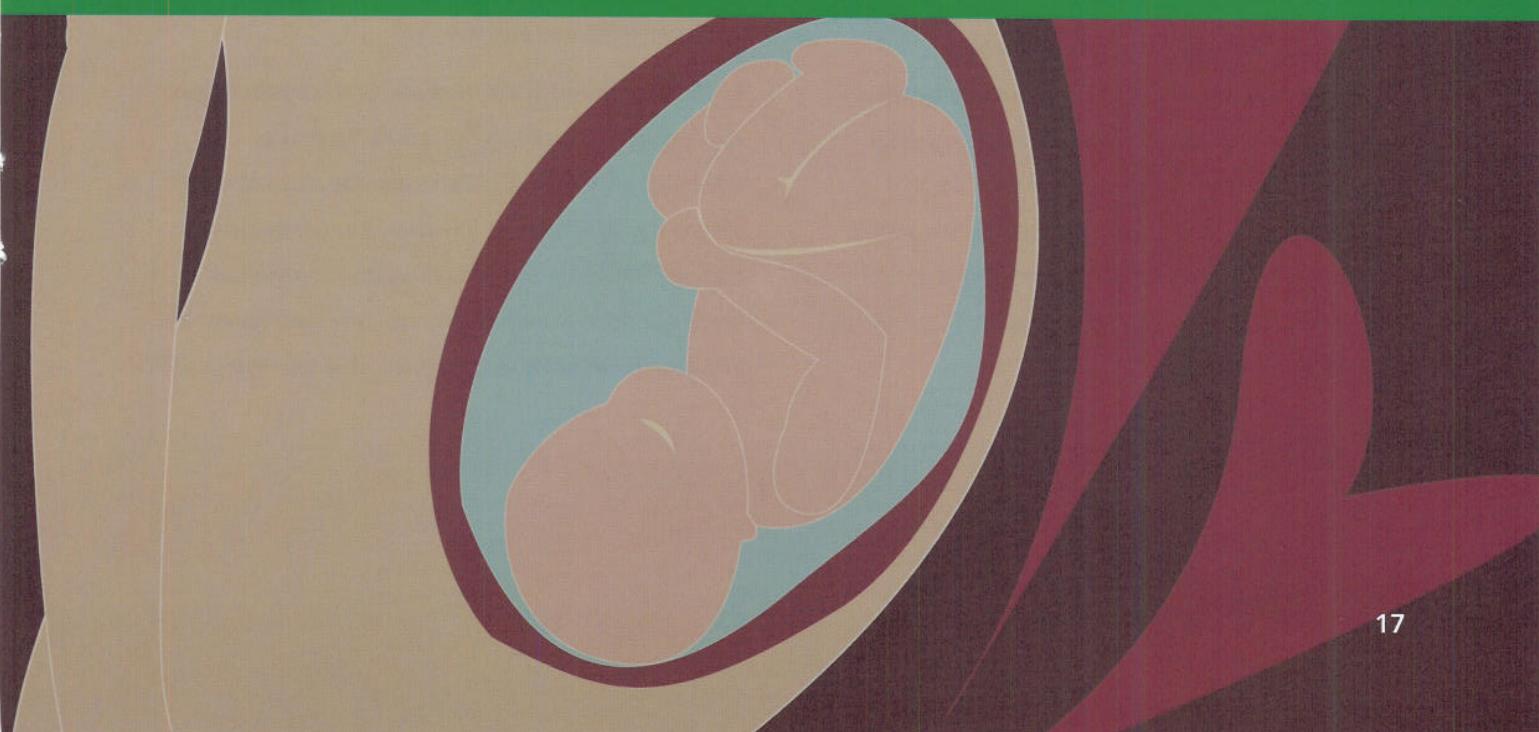

The importance of co-operative governance and intergovernmental relations in South Africa is reflected in Chapter Three of the Constitution, which determines a number of guiding principles. Section 41(2) of the Constitution specifically determines that an Act of Parliament must establish or provide for structures and institutions to promote and facilitate intergovernmental relations. It should also provide for appropriate mechanisms and procedures to facilitate the settlement of intergovernmental disputes. A number of intergovernmental structures promote and facilitate co-operative governance and intergovernmental relations between the respective spheres of Government. The Intergovernmental Relations Framework Act provides focus, clarity and certainty regarding core aspects of intergovernmental relations at the executive level of Government.

The six Cabinet committees and five corresponding administrative structures of the Forum of South African Directors-General (FOSAD) was introduced in 1999 to promote both policy and programme integration and co-ordination. The Government's integrated and co-operative governance mechanisms allow for an easy synchronisation between broad national development efforts and the changing global aid architecture based on global co-operation (MDGs), alignment and harmonisation of development processes (Rome Declaration), aid effectiveness (Paris Declaration) and managing for development results (Marrakech Roundtable). Such systems are also mirrored in efforts to reform UN systems to better meet the development needs of its member states.

Millennium Development Goal 5

IMPROVE maternal health

For more than half a million women, pregnancy and childbirth end in death.

A key dimension of the UNDAF will be a focus on supporting the Government to promote South Africa's regional agenda.

This agenda, framed within NEPAD and the philosophy of the African Renaissance, has been established within the context of strengthening regional institutions, infrastructure, systems, capacities and policies for regional development in the interests of inter-regional mutual gains.

The prism of support is a multi-dimensional political and socio-economic approach that seeks to promote the agenda of the developmental state on a regional basis through its regional institutions such as SADC and the AU.

Given its middle-income status, based on a strong economy and effective democratic governance, South Africa's position in the region is inherently different from its neighbours, but there is full recognition that this situation is mutually dependent on peace, security and economic growth in the region.

As a development partner, through the African Renaissance and International Co-operation Fund, South Africa is looking to specialised UN knowledge and expertise to support its regional initiatives based on mutual interest, non-partisanship and the promotion of human rights, good governance and democracy.

PRIORITY AREA ONE:

Governance and Administration

The legacy of apartheid was a fragmented, dysfunctional and costly governance system based on social engineering and geared to maintaining racial segregation. One of the key tasks of the new democratic Government was to dismantle this system and replace it with a system of governance and administration that served all the people of the country in an equitable manner.

The Governance and Administration Cluster programme of improving the performance of the state focuses on broad outcomes such as:

- streamlining systems and processes of the machinery of state to enable better alignment of resources and capability with national priorities;
- integrating service delivery mechanisms and capacity to provide citizen-centred, responsive service delivery machinery;
- directly combating poor performance, corruption and institutional inefficiency.

Although the legislative and policy frameworks for co-operative governance are in place, the Government still faces the challenge of weak institutional and human resource capacity, particularly at the local Government level.

The Priority Area for the UN, through the Governance and Administration Cluster, is therefore to focus on supporting efforts to build good governance, strengthen democracy and an efficient and effective state administration.

PRIORITY AREA TWO:

Economic, Investment and Employment

Post-1994 the new Government inherited a stagnant economy based primarily on unbeneficiated mineral extraction. As a result of years of sanctions and protected industrial, agricultural and financial sectors, economic growth entered negative territory and unemployment and inflation rose.

In 1994 South Africa also had one of the most unequal distributions of wealth in the world. Apartheid education and training policies and the migrant labour system had resulted in a low-skills, low productivity labour force. From the outset the Government has made efforts to stimulate the economy both for growth and for redistribution in order to ensure that the wealth gains of the country are more equitably distributed. The RDP and GEAR were strategic policy frameworks aimed at stimulating the economy by ensuring macro-economic stability, a stable investment environment and a solid trade base. Under the ASGI-SA framework the Government is attempting to address the constraints and challenges to accelerate economic growth to 6% and boost employment opportunities through large-scale public infrastructure and industrial development. The Priority Area for the UN, through the Economic, Investment and Employment Cluster, is therefore to support the country's efforts to accelerate the growth of the economy and ensure development for the benefit of all.

PRIORITY AREA THREE:

International Relations, Peace and Security

During the apartheid period, South Africa was increasingly isolated both globally and regionally on the basis of its segregationist social policies and its flagrant disregard for human rights. This led to South Africa's withdrawal from the Commonwealth in 1961, South Africa's suspension from the United Nations General Assembly in 1974, UN resolutions during the 1980s declaring apartheid as a crime against humanity and the country's inevitable marginalisation from regional economic and political bodies.

During this period South African foreign policy was geared to supporting the Cold War geopolitical agenda of the West, which involved attempts to destabilise liberation efforts throughout the Southern Africa region through both overt and covert military means.

The post-apartheid period has seen the South African Government work tirelessly towards reintegrating itself into international and regional affairs. It has based its efforts on positioning South Africa as global champion of rights-based development, and is working at all levels to strengthen regional institutions as a means for ensuring that the regional economy grows and that democratic governance principles are strengthened as a means to ensuring regional peace and security.

Highpoints of these efforts have been the hosting of the WSSD and the Racism Conference, and South Africa's chairing of the non-aligned movement and its current chairmanship of the G77.

The Priority Area for the UN, through the International Relations, Peace and Security Cluster, is therefore to support the Government in strengthening sub-regional institutions to consolidate the African Agenda, promote global governance and South-South co-operation.

PRIORITY AREA FOUR:

Justice, Crime Prevention and Safety

In the pre-1994 period the state's justice, crime prevention and safety machinery was geared to upholding apartheid laws, imposing repressive regulations and enforcing exclusionary practices. Justice was racially skewed and based on principles that were globally considered to be inhumane and fundamentally inequitable.

When the ANC Government came into power in 1994, it was confronted with having to rapidly transform the justice system within the context of a fragmented society attempting to reconstitute itself under a new democratic, rights-based dispensation.

Achieving the necessary balance has been a difficult matter, but the Government has been proactive in ensuring that justice, crime prevention and safety services are set on the right course at a time of widespread public concern at the capacity of the criminal justice system to deal with high levels of crime.

Despite enormous challenges, the Government has successfully transformed the justice system to ensure that, based on constitutional mandates, it meets the safety and security needs of all South Africans.

The Government has worked particularly hard to ensure that the rights of women, children and marginalised groups are protected through legislation and policy frameworks, and the necessary institutional arrangements are in place to ensure compliance with these frameworks.

The Priority Area for the UN, through the Justice, Crime Prevention and Safety Cluster, is therefore to provide support to Government's efforts to promote justice, peace, safety and security.

PRIORITY AREA FIVE:

Poverty Eradication (Social Cluster)

One of the legacies that the Government has had to deal with has been the breakdown in the social structures of the country and the fragmented nature of social services.

Social fragmentation, the dislocation of family relations, forced separation and marginalisation have been embedded characteristics of a divided nation and, despite enormous challenges, the Government has made impressive strides in ensuring that all South Africans, but particularly the poorest and most marginalised sections of society, are afforded access to social services. In this regard, South Africa has steadily built up an impressive comprehensive social security system.

Since the beginning of the post-apartheid era, a key objective of the South African Government has been the improvement of the quality of life for all South Africans and the reduction of poverty and social inequality.

The South African Constitution enshrines socio-economic rights and requires Parliament to ensure that financial resources are distributed equitably among provincial and local Governments, based on levels of poverty, disadvantage and underdevelopment.

Legislation and policy frameworks across the social sectors have been put in place in an effort to redress past social inequities and ensure that all South Africans have equal access to education, health and other social services.

The Priority Area for the UN, through the Social Cluster, is therefore to support Government poverty eradication interventions.

6. MOVING TOWARDS A UN Country Strategy

The Government of South Africa has increasingly been positioning itself as a developmental state. Under this rubric the South African state is characterised by a coherent bureaucracy with a transformative administrative ethic that has the capacity to perform the developmental functions assigned to it. There is a clear division of labour: the political elite drive long-term strategic decision-making; implementation is carried out by a technocratic bureaucracy; and economic activity is driven by the private sector, but firmly within broad parameters laid down by the state. As part of its developmental agenda, the South African state is engaging in extensive investment in education, capacity development and institution-building within the context of ensuring an equitable distribution of resources and opportunities.

The United Nations' response to the Government's Country Analysis and the National Programme of Action will be guided by the following five strategic approaches, which will contribute to the efforts of the Government and the people of South Africa to transform the country into a non-racial, non-sexist democracy:

Millennium Development Goal 6

COMBAT HIV/AIDS, malaria and other diseases

By killing and incapacitating adults in the prime of their lives, HIV/AIDS can throw development off course.

- People: In collaboration with Government, identify the skills gap of national, provincial and district staff to deliver health, education and safety net services for disadvantaged populations. In addition, the UN will support the strengthening of values and attitudes related to Batho Pele. Based on this joint assessment by Government and the United Nations, training will be targeted, and monitoring mechanisms will be established to track the impact of the skills transfer on actual service delivery. The United Nations' key support to this approach will include: 1) designing and implementing assessment methodologies; 2) preparing training manuals and guidelines; 3) training master trainers; and 4) monitoring the impact of training on skills and service delivery.
- Process: The UN will contribute to national efforts for improving and enhancing service delivery through identifying and resolving bottlenecks to effective planning, budgeting, management, execution and monitoring of services for disadvantaged populations. At present, many local municipalities and provinces are unable to deliver services because access is blocked and allocated budgets are not expended in a timely manner. In addition, existing blockages could be addressed through new process re-engineering technologies and management approaches. The United Nations' key input will be in the area of supporting Government to identify methods that contribute to reducing the time and cost of delivering enhanced services.
- Systems: Based on improved capacity and more efficient processes, the UN will support Government to enhance the capacity of existing systems to scale up service delivery to disadvantaged people, especially at provincial and district levels. Many effective interventions have been demonstrated in South Africa, but they now need to be better co-ordinated and taken to scale. The United Nations' key inputs to improving systems will be in monitoring and evaluation, training, targeting vulnerable groups, and helping to establish structures to deliver scaled-up services for disadvantaged people.

- Advocacy: The UN will work with its development partners to advocate for the safeguarding of socio-economic rights and the improvement of services for disadvantaged populations. In some cases, key policy or legislative changes could have major implications for social protection and service delivery. The United Nations' key inputs will be to share international experiences with South Africa so that it is empowered to share "best practices" with other African countries. In addition, the United Nations will support South Africa to access international resources and also support departments to leverage internal Government resources based on proven cost-efficient approaches.
- Information/Research: Research, data collection and analysis remain critical components of effective development support. South Africa has world-class academic and research institutions and organisations that can more effectively support policy development, evaluation and service delivery through the promotion of a national development discourse. The United Nations' key inputs will be: 1) to support cutting-edge studies and research aimed at identifying cost-effective methods of delivering services, 2) identify new technology, and 3) develop systems to aggregate and analyse data regarding service delivery for disadvantaged populations.

7. PROPOSED TIMELINE for UNDAF

The Government's current strategic plan runs from 2004 – 2014, with a mid-term review scheduled for 2009. In order to ensure that the UN's strategic plans are as flexible as possible, the UN proposes that the UNDAF correspond to the Vision 2014 timeline in two phases. The first phase, which covers this UNDAF, would run from 2007 – 2010. It is timed to allow the UN to analyse the results of the 2009 review during late 2009 and early 2010, leading to a new UNDAF 2011 – 2014.

Millennium Development Goal 7

ENSURE environmental sustainability

Environmental sustainability means using natural resources wisely and protecting the complex ecosystems on which our survival depends.
